Dear Brothers and Sisters of the Meow,

My honorable self will tell you about the time I escaped out the window and went on an adventure of epic proportions.

There was always unimportant things occupying my human's mind and they were not always me, much to my disdain. Having had enough of this disrespect, I went and sat on the window sill, pondering the horrors I had to face being a housecat in the richer part of the town, and in the edge of my vision I saw something. My head moved and my tail twitched, something was behaving a lot like string and soon my curiosity got the best of me. I jumped out of the window onto the floor and chased the string like thing that had by now escaped me. 10 minutes later I stopped my ferocious hunt and sat down gracefully, licking my paw so as to keep up my pristine appearance. Halfway through my careful grooming of said paw, I smelled something I recognized... It was the main source of my human's disturbing diet, which occasionally had milk products which he denied me, and by the smell of it, it was pepperoni.

I sauntered over and stared at a mountain of cardboard boxes from which came a cacophony of smells. I detected Capricosa, Vesuvio, Hawaii, something strange with banana and the heavenly signature smell of pizza with shrimp. One paw in front of the other, I leaped from one cardboard hill to a pizza-in-container tower. I hesitated for a moment before I started diving into heap of old pizza, swimming through the thrashed pizzas as my human went swimming for some yellow liquid which would make him lose his balance and awe for the godly me. He would also text the female human who once lived with her. I did not approve of their separation, she often brought me men who would pet me with a guilty look in their eyes. Silly humans did not realize that I understood that they could never perfectly serve me. But I digress.

At long last I had the shrimp in my powerful jaws and after my belly was full and my fur dirty as never before, I began to turn home, unaware of the evil forces that were in my near future. Once I graced my human with my presence once again, he gave me an worried look that I dismissed as obvious concern for someone as wonderful as I. When he picked me up and I glared at him disapprovingly, he ignored me blatantly and began moving me to the kitchen. I meowed to tell him I was already full, and did not need his concern and he should fucking put me down before I clawed him.

Before reaching the kitchen he opened the bathroom door and closed it. Aware of what was about to happen I prayed to Cthulhu and went berserk as hell descended upon me. Pizza was indeed the devil's device, having put me in this unjust verdict.
